President's Letter

Dear Directors and Members,

The Jewett Family of America, Inc. Board Meeting went very well. I was so glad to have so many members attending. I was sorry that Bill Jewett and his wife Grace weren't with us, and I hope that she is now feeling better and will be with us next year.

We settled a few things but not all. The upper-most is where to store Jewett archives and artifacts. None of us know where! We also have three pallets of Volumes III and IV which need to be stored. Any ideas?

Granton Jewett from New York joined us for the first time as a Director; Bill Nash from Pennsylvania also attended. Both arrived wearing JFA caps from the Pennsylvania Reunion held in early August. They also had JFA t-shirts; we shall look into ordering a quantity for the Reunion in Rowley in August, 2000. Suggestions were also made to order tote bags and other mementos.

Dorothy in a JFA cap

Historian Lee Petry asked that Board vote on donating $100 per year to the Rowley Historical Society. I have contacted the Directors and now have eight votes and ask that those who have not yet voted send theirs to me. The JFA has done so in the past and I see no reason not to now.

Printed in this Quarterly is a ticket to be used in a raffle for the JFA coat of arms which I did in cross-stitch this past year. The Board voted to raffle if off; it will be framed and ready for hanging. Send your $5 and the filled-in ticket to Ted Loranz.

Ranny and I purchased food for the luncheon buffet held at the church. Granton's wife, Virginia, Bill Nash's wife, Vonda, and Ranny put the buffet together and did the clean-up. My thanks for their help. Most of us met at the Starboard Restaurant in Newburyport the evening of the meeting for dinner.

Ranny and I have been blessed with another granddaughter, Meagan Elise Brigham, daughter of David and Karen Brigham of Georgetown MA was born 23 Sep 1998 at Anna Jacques Hospital in Newburyport MA. Meagan has a sister, Ashley, who is eight years old and a brother, Stephen, who is 5 years old. Her maternal grandparents are Stanley and Lillian Coburn of Ipswich MA. Meagan has many aunts, uncles and cousins.

My thanks to all the Jewett gals who wrote to me after the last Quarterly; it was very interesting to note how many belong to the DAR. I think I have most of the letters answered as this Quarterly goes out. It was fun to hear from so many who are DAR members; and, of course, most Jewett ladies are eligible. At the September DAR Convention in Sturbridge MA, Ranny and I had a table for selling such items as ultrasuede jewelry cases as well as an ultrasuede handbag which was raffled off. The Agawam Chapter of Ipswich MA, to which I belong, will receive most of the proceeds. I met our new President General; and she is a lovely lady.

And so starts another business for me — ultrasuede! We have been in the mail order business for six months now and have had many orders for handbags, not only from DAR members but also from Jewett men for their wives. I have been making ultrasuede handbags and jewelry cases with DAR embroidered on them as well as many designs and monograms.

Toujours le même, Dorothy Jewett Brigham

Board of Directors Meeting
The Jewett Family of America, Inc.
September 26, 1998

The Jewett Family of America Board of Directors meeting was held at the First Congregational Church in Rowley, MA. The meeting was called to order at 10 AM on September 26, 1998. Those present were Dorothy Jewett Brigham, President; Ted Loranz, Vice-President, Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary; Natalie Jewett-Bruce, Recording Secretary; and Directors Michael R. Jewett, IN; Russell E. Jewett, MA; Bruce D. Brigham, ME; William Nash, PA; Granton Jewett, NY; William H. Jewett, MA. Dorothy Jewett Stitt, PA. William H. Jewett led us in the Pledge of Allegiance and prayer.

The Treasurer's report was read and accepted. The Secretary's report was also read and accepted with no corrections. There was no Historian's report because lee Jewett Petry, Historian and Editor of Publications was not in attendance. Lee is not feeling well and we all sent her our wishes for a speedy recovery. (Note from Lee Jewett Petry: Actually I am doing very well. I had just finished a week of chemotherapy the day before the meeting was held and could not get to the meeting. I want to thank everyone for their good wishes and prayers. My oncologist says I should be a poster person for how things are supposed to go.)

Michael R. Jewett reported on the Ambassador Program. He has nominated three new Ambassadors: Vicky Sleasman of Craig AK, Josephine Jewett Dillon of Montrose PA, and James S. Jewett of Spokane WA. Welcome to all.

Under old business, a web page has been set up as suggested last year. It's a good way to learn about your family. You will find it at hhtp://www.ultranet.com/~aloranz/jfa.html

Ted Loranz spoke about the unsold copies of Volumes III and IV of the History and Genealogy of the Jewetts of America. He needs a new place to store them and although many suggestions were made, there is still a question of where they should go. Ted is also ready to print a new directory of current members. It will include spouses and e-mail addressees if available. Any information in this regard should be sent to Ted.

We adjourned for lunch at 12:20 PM and reconvened at 1:30 PM to elect new officers for the following year. Michael R. Jewett read the Nominating Committee's slate for 1999 as follows:

President - Dorothy Jewett Brigham
Vice-President, Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary - Ted Loranz
Recording Secretary - Natalie Jewett-Bruce
Auditor - Dorothy Jewett Brigham
Directors - Roland C. Jewett, MD
William Nash, PA
Richard Lee Jewett, CA
Carrie A. Cole, GA
Richard D. Gorball, IA

There were no other nominations from the floor so the slate was passed as presented.

The Nominating Committee members for next year are Michael R. Jewett, William Nash and Bruce Brigham. The target date for the next Board Meeting is September 25, 1999.

The rest of the meeting was devoted to remarks and suggestions for the National Jewett Reunion to be held in Rowley in the year 2000. We would like this to be a big even; so start planning for it now.

The meeting was adjourned at 2:15 PM.

Respectively submitted,
Natalie Jewett-Bruce

Jewett Family Notes

Correction: 1998 Quarterly No. 3, p. 52: Jamie Marie Rasmussen (15375) graduated 1995 in Olathe KS from Olathe North High School. She is attending Pittsburg State University, Pittsburg KS. Jenny Lee Rasmussen (15377) is a senior at Olathe North High School.

There have been a number of reviews in various publications on The Murder of helen Jewett: The Life and Death of a Prostitute in Nineteenth Century New York by Patricia Cline Cohen. In actuality the young woman who was murdered was named Dorcas Doyan. Helen Jewett was only one of the pseudonyms that she had used during her career.

In the September 1998 issue of Reader's Digest there was an article titled "Unforgettable 'Madaket Millie.'" Information found in the article identifies her as Mildred Jewett born in Nantucket in 1907. She was three when her mother ran away from her violent husband, and Millie and her father then moved to Madaket. Does anyone knew any more about Millie and who her father was ?

"Happy Girl" Began 4-H Dynasty

After 72 years, Jewett clan is still down on the farm

By Robert Green
Capital Weekly, August 21, 1997

Pittston [Maine] - Four generations of 4-H Club members and prize-winning animals started here with a 20-year-old farmer and a herd of Ayrshire dairy cows. In 1925, Donald Jewett (9591) started his dairy herd on a farm in East Pittston. In 1944, Jewett. his family and their cows moved to a new farm on Route 27.

What's left of the farm has served as a home to four generations of Jewetts, and the land is now the site of nine family homes and three businesses.

Donald Jewett and his wife, Helen, farmed all of their lives with a focus on dairy cows. All the work on the farm was done with horses until the family bought a tractor in 1949. Before he married, Don Jewett showed his herd at the Windsor Fair, hitching his cattle to a horse team and wagon and driving the animals from East Pittston to Windsor via the Hunts Meadow Road.

But the fun really started in 1945 with Jewett's daughter Gwen (21155) and her cow, Happy Girl. "Dad went to Vermont and got her mother and then went to Rhode Island to get her father," Gwen Jewett Dunbar recalled. Dunbar now runs a fresh vegetable and pickle business called Greenledge Farms.

Little Gwen joined the local 4-H Club around 1945 with her Ayrshire calf and her parents soon followed as 4-H leaders, eventually forming a 4-H dairy club called the Maine Ayrshire Club. The club competed at the 4_h Eastern States competition in Springfield MA many times in the 1950's and 1960's. Members of the club often were top winners at the show, Dunbar said.

Dunbar's cow, Happy Girl, competed at the Eastern States three times - first as a calf in 1948, then as a senior heifer in 1949 and, in 1954, as the highest scoring cow in the New England Milking Derby.

Dunbar wasn't the only Jewett child to compete. Her sisters, twins Barbara (21156) and Bernice (21157), once took twin Ayrshire heifers named Sue and Sal to the competition. Another year, Barbara, Bernice and brother Curtis (21158) competed, and Barbara returned home with the Grand Champion title. During that competition, Bernice showed with Honey Girl, one of happy Girl's daughters. Honey Girl took first in her class that year.

Donald Jewett also got his granddaughter Cheryl Dunbar (21211), now Cheryl Peaslee, into Ayrshires. Peaslee competed at eastern States in 1973 and 1974, served on the judging team in Springfield and for a 4-H competition in Ohio. "It kept us out of trouble," Peaslee recalled. "Our parents knew where we were at night because we were too tired to do anything." Peaslee was a member of the Work to Win 4-H Club.

Donald Jewett died in 1969, a year after his daughter Gwen and her husband, Robert, purchased the family farm. Helen Jewett died in 1993.

Donald Jewett's great granddaughter Alicia Peaslee (21256) will keep up the family tradition with her first trip to Eastern States next month, but she won't be bringing a red and white Ayrshire. To compete, Alicia will ride a red and white horse named Lost MY Sock. Alicia, a Gardner Area High School junior, calls her horse "Socks" for short. Socks is a 15-year-old unregistered quarter horse. Alicia, now 16, has been riding since she was 9 years old. "I've got a strong love for horses and I can's break it," Peaslee said. Peasleee's 4-H Club is Maine-ly Tails of Pittston. It used to be called the East Pittston Pony Express. After high school, Peaslee said she'd like to become a large-animal veterinarian. "It's the dream of every girl who loves horses," she said. peaslee said she enjoys math and science and plays clarinet in her high school's band.

Visitors to the old family farm probably won't find a single ayrshire but they will see a barn full of horses. "It was kind of a natural changeover," Cheryl Peaslee said. "My grandfather kept horses to work with." The Peaslees own four horses and board five more. As with many family dairy farms in this area, the jewett herd was sold off when it stopped making money. "That's just the way it is," Gwen Dunbar Said. "Something goes away but something else always comes around to replace it."

The Jewett Clan, circa 1997

Pittston [Maine] - The old Jewett Farm once stretched on both sides of Route 27 here. Nowadays, the Jewett land no longer touches the Kennebec but it does wrap around both sides of Amity Lane.

Nine households of Jewett descendants live on the old farm land, which also is home to three family businesses.

Gwen (21155) and Bob Dunbar, owners of Greenledge Farm
Barbara (21156) and G.I. Shaw
Curtis (21158) and Mary Jewett, owners of Jewett Builders
Jean (21210) and Dana Ambrose and son, Ivan (21255)
Cheryl (21211) and Wayne Peaslee, owners of C.W. Repair, and their children, Alicia (21256) and Tammy (21257)
Cathy (21220) and Jim Thomas and their child, Alex (21265)
Sarah (21221) and Rusty McLaughlin and their children, Ryan (21266) and Meagan (21267)
Bruce (21213) and Maria Dunbar and their children, Sabrina (21258) and Jake (21259)
Barry Shaw (21215)

Regarding Halflinger Horses

Submitted by Elaine Sleeter (25533)

Gerald Jewett, Jr. of Fairfield VT, son of Gerald Alfred Jewett, Sr. (25440), is involved in raising and training Halflinger horses. These are a smaller breed of horses — larger than a full sized pony and not too common. He became interested in these horses through his older brother, Raymond, who started with a "bred-down" Belgian mare and a Halflinger.

Gerald started with a filly Halflinger from Raymond's horse. Interest grew, and the two brothers attended auction sales in Ohio where Gerald bought two Halflingers in the spring of 1995. Later that year he bought two full grown horses and an 8-month old stallion. At the present time (July 1998) Gerald has 6 grown Halflingers plus a mare that foaled in June.

These horses range in height from 52" to 59" or 13 to 14.2 hands high. The coats can vary from pale palimino to a reddish chestnut in color. Offspring are known to look remarkably like their parents. The only difference I could see in the horses was in the white blaze on their faces. They have a lovely temperment, are hardy mountain horses, and popular and versatile. The horses are trained for pulling wagons, sleighs, buggies and all-around fun.

Both Gerald and Raymond (who died 24 Feb 1997) have shown their horses by pulling wagons in parades and entertaining at their Jewett family reunion in September by taking family members for wagon rides. Gerald also had sleigh rides last year in the community. He also has a special buggy for special occasions such as weddings.

Bible Translations among the Ixil-Maya Indians of Central America

Letter from Dwight David Jewett (16210)

There is a bit of a lull in the translation work right now; so I'll try to give you a very geberal overview of what we're involved in. We are working here in Guatemala, Central America under the auspices of the Wycliffe Bible Translators, Inc. (WBT) and its sister organization, the Summer Institute of Linguistics (SIL). Both are non-sectarian organizations whose goal it is to do linguistic research among minority language groups around the world and to bring them the Scriptures and "other literature of high moral value" in their own language. Rather than go into a great deal of detail here about these organizations and their goals, in this age of electronic marvels I'll refer you to their respective web pages on the so-called "information superhighway." Please refer to : www.wycliffe.org or to www.sil.org.

My wife Susan and I joined the WBT in 1975 and, after some preliminary training in the US and southern Mexico, came to Guatemala in late 1976 under the auspices of SIL. Following several months of Spanish language study in San José, Costa Rica, we returned to Guatemala in April of 1977. Using the insights of the science of descriptive linguistices, we began the task of learning one of the dialects of the Ixil-Maya Language as it is spoken in the highlands of rural Guatemala. Until that time Ixil (pronounced ee-SHEEL) of Chajul (pronounced chah-HOOL) remained an unwritten langauage spoken by about 20,000-25,000 people; so our first job was to analyze the sound system (phonology) of the langauge and create a practical alphabet so that the langauge could be written. We were well into the process when political violence erupted in the area, and we were required to leave the Ixil area for about three years.

When we were able to return in 1982, we, in cooperation with another SIL colleague, taught about a dozen Ixil people to read Ixil well and then to teach their fellow Ixil people how to read. Employing them as teachers, we began a small literacy school aimed at teaching Ixil children to read and write their own language, using the written form of the language we had devised. That school continued for about ten years, during which time over 1,000 children learned to read and write their own language — the first Ixil people of Chajul ever to do so — using a reading primer we had created in cooperation with Ixil co-workers. During the years we edited and published several booklets of Ixil folk stories as well as other small books dealing with various Ixil Artisans' skills, including stories about how the women weave their blouses and how the men make blow guns and weave baskets. Last year we published a 3,000 word Ixil - Spanish bilingual dictionary.

Since about 1982, we have been working with various native speakers of the Ixil-Maya language to translate the New Testament into their particular dialect of Ixil. At the same time, and SIL colleague and his wife, a medical doctor from El Salvadore, have been working to translate slected portions of the Old Testament into the same language and to improve the medical care available to the people in that community in the highlands of rural Guatemala. Our goal is to publish all of the New Testament and about 1/3 of the Old Testament within the next two to three years and leave it in the hands of the Ixil people of the community of Chajul.

"Talking Boxes"

Pat Smith, Greensburg Daily News, Greensburg IN, 26 Jan 1994

A couple of weeks ago I wrote "If it's possible for a township to get a raw deal the Adams Township is a good example." What do you bet that it is about to happen again? Last week the Greensburg Daily News carried a story about Princeton IN resident, Steven Shearer's, book Hoosier Connections. The 424-page book is a history of the telephone in Indiana. The article stated "As for the telephone's first appearance in Indiana, Shearer pins that to 1877, a year after Alexander Graham Bell patented his invention."

If the book doesn't include the history of the real first appearance of the telephone in Indiana then Adams Township gets brushed aside, because that's where the first telephone was invented by Israel D. Jewett (18386) before 1870.

The residents in the area referred to the discovery as :talking boxes," but a Cincinnati newsman decided it should have a name and dubbed it the "agophone." No matter what it was called people were talking with their neighbors via the discovery. several years before Alexander Graham Bell said, "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you" in 1876.

The only reason Jewett didn't apply for a patent on his invention until 1878 (actual date was 7 Jan 1879) was because he couldn't figure out exactly what the thing was that he had invented. Years later he discovered that his patent had been entered wrong. Meantime though, he fixed the lines so his neighbors could use the thing and they loved it.

The Jewett family were among the first settlers in Adams Township, locating near Downeyville where Hiram D. Jewett (18373) built a mill, made whiskey and ran a tannery. His son Israel D.[avid] was born in 1842, went to school at St. Omer, ran businesses in Adams, St. Omer and Williamstown. He moved to Greensburg in 1894, after starting the Jewett telephone Co. that year. In 1908 he moved back to the Adams Township homeplace. He died in 1919 and is buried in Star Cemetery.

Bob Mitchell, St. Paul, supplied information for this column about Jewett's invention, including a story that appeared in the Indianapolis News in 1909. Bob Said, "I didn't know Israel, but I knew his son, Dr. Earl D.[ayton] Jewett (18405), whom we all enjoyed seeing on his frequent visits to our place in St. Paul."

Jewett was running his general store in St. Omer in 1867 or 1868 when he discovered that the human voice could be transmitted over distances never before thought possible. After some experimentation he got the idea of using a dinner horn to intensify the vibration of the voice, and as a collector. He learned that a wire could be used for transmission. Finally he produced a box after studying the principal of the guitar.

Jewett was quoted in the 1909 news article as saying, "There were no magnets, no electricity. I claim no invention to that character. I suppose that mt telephone, even in its most perfected state, would not be effective for greater distances than four or five miles.

But I do believe that I discovered the art of transmitting sound, and that I was the first. I had the phone perfected in the early seventies, and we were using them around here long before Bell created the sensation at the Centennial."

When the article for the Indianapolis News was written in 1909 there were still people living in the area who remembered Jewett's discovery. John Holmes said, "I was married in 1870 and I recollect it was just when I was opening my home at St. Omer that we had our first telephone there. Jewett ran [line missing] and heard the music and the callers at a dance up in the country about two miles from the store.

"Jewett had the wires running all around St. Omer and he constructed a line from St. Omer to Paul. Lightening struck it but when it was up you could hear people over the line. The two towns are two miles apart."

Word got out about the invention before Jewett was prepared for the publicity. A Cincinnati attorney stopped in the St. Omer store while Jewett and his mother were talking on the instrument - Jewett at the store and his mother in their home a mile away.

The attorney contacted the Cincinnati Gazette and the next day a reporter was in Jewett's store. The reporter didn't identify himself but asked questions which Jewett answered until he got suspicious.

The next day a long article on the front page of the Gazette let the world know of the St. Omer discov [line missing] parts of the country and people came up to see the new instrument. That was in the early (18) 70's, and before the Centennial.

"Still I didn't patent it until 1878. I then only got it in by a few days ahead of a Michigan man. The records show that I was the first man to get a patent on a mechanical telephone."

Jewett said he never raised any questions with Bell or others about the telephone but "when Edison was experimenting with his talk-reproducing machine, and I heard that he was using a conical centralizer for gathering up and intensifying sound, I did serve notice on him that he was infringing on my patent." Edison wrote back that Jewett should have an attorney examine the patent. It turned out that he had patented the telephone, sound collector and intensifier all together which made the patent worthless.

More should be written about the [line missing].

Saturday, 1882

I have just seen the notice of Longfellow's death, and while it is hardly a surprise, still it gave me a great shock. Are not you glad that we saw him on that pleasant day when he was ready to talk about books and people, and showed so few signs of the weakness and pain which troubled us in those other visits? It will always be a most delightful memory, and it is all the better that we did not dream it was your last good-bye. I can't help saying that I am glad he has gone away before you had to leave him and know it was the last time you should see him. I dreaded your getting the news of this after we were on the other side of the sea, darling! After all, it is change that is so hard to bear, change grows every a harder part of our losses. It is fitting over our old selves to new conditions of things, without the help of the ones who made it easier for us to live, and to do our best that is so hard! I have just been thinking that a life like that is so much less affected by death than most lives. A man who has written as Longfellow wrote, stays in this world always to be known and loved - to be a helper and a friend to his fellow men. It is a grander thing than we can wholly grasp, that life of his, a wonderful life, that is not shut in to his own household or kept to the limits of his every-day existence. That part of him seems very little when one measures the rest of him with it, and the possibilities of this imperfect world reach out to a wide horizon, for one's eye cannot follow the roads his thought and influence have always gone. And now what must heaven be to him! This world could hardly ask any more from him: he has done so much for it, and the news of his death takes away from most people nothing of his life. His work stands like a great cathedral in which the world may worship and be taught to pray, long after its tired architect goes home to rest.

I cannot help thinking of those fatherless daughters of his. I know they were glad and proud because he was famous and everybody honored him, and they are being told those things over and over in these days, and are not comforted. Only one's own faith and bravery help one to live at first.

Account of Assistant Surgeon George Jewett, Tenth Massachusetts Volunteers, of Battle of Malvern Hill, Virginia, July 1, 1862.

HEADQUARTERS, TENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,
July 25, 1862.

SIR: Knowing that whatever affects the comfort or well-being of Massachusetts regiments will interest you, I respectfully report the condition and treatment of the wounded left in the hands of the enemy at the battle of Malvern Hill. The battle raged with great fury the after part of the day until dark, when the enemy retired, leaving the well-contested field in our undisturbed possession.

During the night most of the wounded were brought in, but our forces leaving in the early morning, the wounded who were unfortunately scattered in the woods were left to the care of the enemy and were not brought in until the second, and in some cases the third day.

The Malvern House, barns, Negro quarters and out houses were filled to overflowing with the wounded, to the number of 350, including the commanding officer of our own regiment as well as many other officers, nearly all of these were severely wounded, the milder cases having managed to escape.

When the Medical Director left, he assured me he had left medicines, medical supplies, and food for our wounded, but unfortunately the temper and character of those to whose tender care we were confided was not fully understood, and we were soon deprived of our whole supply of sugar, coffee, most of our stimulants, instruments, stove for culinary purposes, besides any of our valuable medicines, chloroform and quinine especially attracting their attention.

When the enemy first made their appearance, we made known our position and were assured we should not be disturbed in our occupation. We were soon visited by officers of the highest rank, were required to give our parole, and assured of their protection. We soon found work of great magnitude. The great number and severity of the wounds, and few attendants, utterly prohibited our caring in detail for any but the severest cases, and our first effort was directed toward the saving of life, and feeding the men.

We now began to feel the loss of our stores and were soon obliged to apply to our enemies for commissary stores. We received the intelligence that "we should be supplied equally as well as their own." We soon received our rations which consisted entirely of bacon and flour, with no appliances for cooking either. We found and old iron pot in which we baked our flour, having been mixed with water and molded into cakes. A single cake and a piece of boiled or fried bacon was the meal for breakfast, dinner, and supper. We also made a soup of flour and water in which bacon had been boiled and cut into fine pieces.

Among the wounded were some eight or ten bad cases of compound fracture of the superior maxillary, with great destruction of the organs of the throat, face and loss of inferior maxillary more or less entire. We found it impossible to feed these cases, sufficient to keep them from starvation, with any food we had at our disposal, and none of the appliances for retaining the hard and soft parts "in situ." We determined to send them at once to Richmond.

Another class of wounds were very trying, viz. those shot through the cranium. In most of these cases there was hernia cerebri followed in some instances by collapse of the brain, the organ nor filling the cavity of the cranium.

Perhaps the most trying of all the troubles which beset us was the deposit of the ova of the common blue fly upon almost every moist structure, whether flesh or clothing. We could not even dress a case of amputation without this terrible annoyance. The necessary consequence was a crawling mass of larvae, not only on the wounds, but upon every kind of clothing. They were found within the cranium, beneath the eyelid, in fact everywhere, in spite of all precautions.

Amid these and many other trials and perplexities, we worked on night and day. But each succeeding day seemed to bring on new troubles. Our candles entirely gave out, and only now and then could a small piece be begged from a secesh soldier. Through long weary night cries of anguish fell upon our ears, proceeding from some unfortunate move of a neighbor sufferer, thereby coming in contact with the contiguous mutilated limb, most of which might have been avoided by aid of sufficient light.

Next, our supply of dressings gave out entirely, and I was obliged to resort to the fields for old pieces of tents or bits of cloth of any kind, that our stumps might be protected from the evils incident to exposure under these circumstances.

It was not until the third day that we could get our dead buried. A great number of dead horses lay unburied in all directions about us, and to perfect the picture of misery, a group of horses and mules, mutilated by shot and shell, hobbled into our yard, and holding up their mutilated limbs, mutely cried to us for sympathy and comfort.

We had about twenty-five capital operations; all save one seemed to indicate a favorable termination. We performed no amputations of the thigh above the middle third. For compound fractures of upper thirds the straight splint and simple dressings alone were used. Several shell wounds of the lower extremities rapidly gangrened, but amputation saved the life at the expense of the limb. I am happy to add that one or two badly comminuted fractures of the tibia and fibula, which we should have amputated had we found time, finally promised a favorable termination. I refer to the cases for the benefit of conservative surgery.

In regard to personal treatment, I have nothing of which to complain in so far as officials were concerned. My blankets were taken the first day, and I was obliged to lie on the ground through the long chilly nights without protection, or when driven by extreme suffering, accept the only choice left me, of taking the blanket from the dead body of a comrade who might be lying near, my sensibilities being overcome by suffering and exhaustion.

But I will not further protract this painful history, but simply state that all but thirty were carried to Richmond in ambulances and then were brought aboard the steamer Commodore under a flag of truce to Harrison's Landing.

I will state a single fact farther - the first opportunity which presented, an effort was made on our part for an immediate exchange of the wounded, as it was apparent to all that they could not properly care for their own and our wounded, which fact was fully admitted on their part.

By the medical officers of the Confederate Army I was treated [with] the greatest kindness and courtesy, and I believe it was impossible for them to provide for our comfort as they wished to do.

One thing I have not failed to do, to thank God that I am once more among friends who love and strive to maintain the dear old flag or our common country.

Very respectfully yours.

The Death of Jewett

Personal Recollections of a Cavalryman: With Custer's Michigan Cavalry Brigade in the Civil War
Chapter XII
From Gettysburg to Falling Waters

General [Hugh Judson] Kilpatrick had been attending to matters in Hagerstown. It was evident that there was considerable force there and that it was constantly augmenting. The opening gun at Williamsport called his attention to a new danger. It looked as though he had deliberately walked into a trap. In a moment I saw him coming, dashing along the flank of the column. He was urging his horse to its utmost speed. In his hand he held a small riding whip with which he was touching the flank of his charger as he rode. His face was pale. His eyes were gazing fixedly to the front and he looked neither to the right nor to the left. The look of anxiety on his countenance was apparent. The sound of the cannon grew louder and more frequent; we were rushed rapidly to the front. The First brigade followed and to the officer in command of it was assigned the task of holding back Lee's army while the Michigan brigade tried titles with [Confederate General John] Imboden. [General John] Buford, with the First cavalry division, was fighting [General "Jeb"] Stuart's cavalry to the left, towards Boonsborough, and on him depended to keep open the only avenue of escape from the position in which Kilpatrick found himself.

In a little time the two brigades were fighting back to back, one facing north and the other south, and each having more than it could attend to.

Pretty soon we arrived on the bluff overlooking Williamsport. Imboden's artillery had the exact range and were pouring shell into the position where the brigade was trying to form.

Just before arriving at the point where we were ordered to turn to the right through an opening in a rail fence, into a field, Aaron C. Jewett (6003), acting adjutant of the regiment, rode along the column delivering the order from the colonel. During the Gettysburg Campaign Jewett had been acting adjutant and would have received his commission in a short time. His modest demeanor and affable manners had won the hearts of all his comrades. He had made himself exceedingly popular, as well as useful, and was greatly beloved in the regiment. When he delivered the order the pallor of his countenance was noticeable. There was no tremor, no shrinking, no indication of fear; he was intent upon performing his duty; gave the order and, turning, galloped back to where the shells were flying thick and fast. When I arrived at the gap in the fence he was there; he led the way into the field; told me where to go in; there was no trepidation on his part but still the deathly pallor. As we passed into the field a shell exploded directly in front of us. It took a leg off a man in Troop H which preceded us and had dismounted to fight on foot, and I saw him hopping around on his one remaining limb and heard him shriek with pain. A fragment of the same shell took a piece off the rim of Lieutenant E.L. Craw's hat. He was riding at my side. I believe it was the same shell that killed Jewett. He had left me to direct the next troop in order, and a fragment of one of these shells struck him in the throat and killed him instantly. As I moved rapidly forward after getting into the field I did not see him again, and did not know he was killed until after dark, when we had succeeded in making our escape by a very narrow chance.

We were moved well over to the right - all the time under a furious fire of artillery - and kept there until almost dark, fighting all the time with the troops that were pushed out from Williamsport. In the meantime, the firing and yelling in rear could be heard distinctly and it seemed that at any moment the little force was to be closed in on and captured. Finally, just after dark, it was withdrawn. Those on the right of the road - the First and Sixth - the Fifth and Seventh being to the left, were obliged to reach and cross the pike to make their escape. [Captain Peter A.] Weber stealthily withdrew the battalion. He was the last man to leave the field. When we were forming in the road, after rallying the skirmishers, the enemy was in plain sight only a little way toward Hagerstown and it seemed as if one could throw a stone and hit them. We expected they would charge us, but they did not, and probably the growing darkness prevented it. In fact, there was a manifest a disposition on their part to let us alone if we would not molest them.

We then marched off into a piece of woods and, the regiment having all been reunited, learned - those who had not known of it - of Jewett's death. His body was still where it fell. The suggestion was made to go and recover it. Weber and his men made an attempt to do so, but by that time the enemy had come up and taken possession of the field. This was a terrible blow to all, to be obliged to leave the body of a beloved comrade; to be denied the privilege of aiding in placing him in a soldier's grave, and performing the last offices of affection for a fallen friend.

The death of Jewett was blow to the regiment the most severe because he was the first officer killed up to that time. A portion of the regiment had been roughly handled on the evening of July 2, at Hunterstown . . . A number of the rank and file were in the list of killed, wounded and missing. Enough had been seen of war to bring to all a realization of its horrors. Death was a familiar figure, yet Jewett's position as adjutant had brought him into close relations with both officers and men and his sudden death was felt as a personal bereavement. It was like coming into the home and taking one of the best beloved of the household.

Carrie Jewett, The Little Girl in the Yellow Dress

The Little Girl in the Yellow Dress

by Josephine Voss, Timeline, October 1984

Carrie Jewett, The Little Girl in the Yellow Dress, is home again in Lancaster, (Ohio). Her return - the Fairfield Heritage Association purchased the painting in 1982 - was set in motion by coincidence and a chance encounter and sparked a renewed interest in her identity. Like every good mystery story, hers leaves something to the imagination.

In 1949 Pick Richardson, an astute antique dealer and collector, was in one of the oldest homes in the old city of Lancaster. In the attic of the home of the recently-deceased Miss Alice Champion, he came across a number of old frames which he purchased on-the-spot for $1.00 each. Mounted in one of these frames was an unusual early painting of a very young girl in a yellow dress - subject unknown, but certainly American, almost certainly Ohio. For three decades, despite many offers to sell, he kept her in his personal collection.

In 1977 the painting wa sold - unannounced - to an unknown dealer. Four years later two members of Fairfield Heritage Association attended the Cincinnati Antiques Shoe, where they paused briefly to examine the display of Chicagoan Taylor B. Williams. Learning that the pair where from Lancaster, Williams exclaimed, "Really? I have a painting in Chicago that came from Lancaster."

On the basis of that chance remark, the long-delayed return to Lancaster was set in motion.. Williams, a friend of Pick Richardson's, had been the painting's 1977 purchaser. He had removed it to Chicago where he displayed it briefly in his shop, before retiring it to his private collection. Now, with an impending commitment to a new building and the need for capital, he was preparing to offer the painting for sale at the New York Armory Show - for substantially more that its original price of $1.00.

Coincidence had played its part. The painting had been located and was available. But still the questions remained: "Who did it?> and "Who was she?" Despite Years of admiration and speculation, no one had made a determined search for the answer to either question.

The first concern was to give the little girl a name, for in so doing puzzles of both historic and artistic importance might well ne solved. Ruth Drinkle assumed the role of Hercule Poirot. Drawing upon he wide knowledge of Fairfield County's past and people, she contacted a friend who had moved from Lancaster some thirty years previously - Isabelle Champion Duffendach, the niece of the long-departed Miss Alice Champion.

The answer came at last, and a tragic story it was. The Little Girl in the Yellow Dress now had a name: Carrie Jewett, born in 1852, died in 1854 in Kenton, Ohio - the older half sister of Alice Champion.

Carrie Jewett's mother, Mrs. Caroline Champion, was the daughter of Judge James Wilkinson, a member of one of Maumee's pioneer families, and Alice Cook Roby. At sixteen Caroline married Chauncey Mathews, a doctor in Maumee. That same year, 1847, she bore a son (Chauncey) and her husband died in an epidemic. About 1850 Caroline married the Reverend A.W. Jewett, an Episcopal rector who at the time of his death in December 1854 was serving a parish in Kenton, Ohio. His eulogy, published in the Kenton newspaper, tells of the great bereavement of Caroline Wilkinson Mathews Jewett, who had lost not only her husband but also their lovely little two-year-old daughter, Carrie, the previous summer. The portrait was that of little Carrie and must have been painted in 1853 or 1854 - probably in Maumee.

Twice widowed with one surviving son, Caroline married Marcus Champion, a railroader, in 1859. Marcus and Caroline Headed west, and added two children to their family - Curtis Roby and Alice. But in 1865, Marcus was killed in a steamboat explosion on the Sacramento River at Rio Vista, California.

Caroline and her three children returned via the Isthmus of Panama to Lyme, Connecticut, the home of her late husband. There she stayed for a few years while Chauncey, her oldest son, finished his education. When he obtained a railroad position in Lancaster, Ohio, Caroline and all her family moved there in 1870. Among the precious family belongings she brought with her to furnish their home was the lovely portrait of carrie, her little lost daughter.

Ruth Drinkle's sleuthing had resolved the critical question of the little girl's identity. But the story does not yet have an ending, for the second question remains unanswered - the name of the talented but untrained artist who painted Carrie Jewett shortly before her death is still a mystery. Like so many artists of his time, he left his work unsigned. If, as seems likely, the portrait was painted in the Maumee area, no record of such an artist has yet been uncovered. Conceivably the artist could have been from the East, for in its exhilarating heyday, Maumee was expected to become the major center of the Midwest. Prominent maumee families like the Wilkinsons had close economic and cultural ties with the eastern Seaboard. But to date, no evidence has been found to support any identification theory, and experienced antique dealers consider ascertaining the artist's name a remote possibility. However, in this story of coincidence and chance, surely it is possible that one more such incident may occur, all owing "The End" to be written to the mystery of Carrie Jewett, The Little Girl in the Yellow Dress.
