Jewett Website

Jewett Family member, Rodney Jewett has volunteered to host and maintain his Jewett website for our benefit. He does own the domain name. You can access the website at www.jewett.org. Back issues of the newsletter, and yearbooks have been added. Current issues of the newsletter are not available at this time but will be added at a later date.

From the Editor's Desk

Thank you to Fred C. Hunt, Toni Jewett-Chavez Dorothy Vander Meulen, Carrie Cole and Sarah King for their contributions to this edition of the Quarterly. Your time and efforts are most appreciated.

Please note that my collection of submitted material is very low at present. I would welcome any material that you would like to share, including stories, articles, pictures and even interesting web sites for the next or future Quarterly issues. If you would like to send photos please send either glossy prints or JPG files.

Additionally, I would be open to suggestions on what you might like to see in the newsletter. If possible, drop me a line, and I or another family member could research the topic for presentation in an upcoming newsletter.

Tom

Contemplations of your President

I hope everyone had a good Thanksgiving and was able spend it with family and friends. Since there are only two of us at home now (Trina the cat doesn't really count but don't tell her that), we no longer celebrate at home. We usually go to my daughter's uncle-in-law's home where we can always count on watching the Detroit Lions lose on big-screen HDTV. The team did not disappoint again this year and the holiday feast was as delicious as ever. It is really nice to enjoy the holiday but not have to clean up before or after it.

So far the winter in New England has been much warmer than normal and we hope that continues. There have been a couple of aberrations where over a foot of snow fell during October (set some new records) and again the day before Thanksgiving, but they were mostly inland. We received about an inch in southeastern Massachusetts and coastal Maine and it disappeared very quickly.

Christmas lights seemed to appear a little earlier this year but I bucked the trend and just put ours up. I have honed my front window display so that it assembles (and disassembles) very quickly, the whole process taking less than an hour. It is funny how, as I get older, I become more efficient at some things and less efficient at others. Maybe it has something to do with how much I enjoy the task?

In past years we have sent out dues/publication fee notices in December. It is my fear that they could get lost in the holiday rush and overlooked. This year we are going to send the notices in early January to try to prevent this. We desperately need to improve the less than 50% response of the past few years. Last year we had dues/publication fees paid by only 222 out of over 500 members. Our main expenses are printing and postage and, as most of you know, the postal rates will again rise in January 2012. If you have already paid for 2012 you will not receive a notice.

This issue of the quarterly contains information and pictures of the Rowley Cemetery gravestone restoration project. We are deeply appreciative of Jonathan Appel's efforts and the $3,250 donated by JFA members towards this worthy cause.

The holidays are almost upon us as I write this and I would like to wish you all a very merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

Toujours le même,

Ted Loranz

Jewett Family of America
Annual Board Meeting Minutes

October 1, 2011

Attending: Ted Loranz, Bunny Mansir, Mary Gorball, Ken Jewett, Linda Remley, Barbara Shaw, Jessie Elliot, and Johanna Jennings

The meeting was called to order at 3:08pm by President Ted Loranz

Old Business:
Mary Gorball made a motion to accept the minutes from the 2010 Board Meeting. Linda Remley seconded the motion and they were accepted by the directors as written.

The Treasurer's Report was presented to the Board. Ted reported that some money was taken out of the brokerage account to pay for the restoration of the Rowley cemetery. We received about $3,000 in donations to restore the cemetery. Barbara Shaw made a motion, Ken Jewett seconded and the Board accepted the Treasurer's Report for Fiscal Year 2011.

There was discussion about the next Jewett Family Reunion and how it might be a good idea to schedule it during Rowley's centennial celebration is the hopes that this would bring more people to the reunion.

Ted mentioned that the Board needs to nominate an auditor for the next year.

New Business:
Ted asked if the Family wanted to provide $200 grants to each of the following: Oberlin, Rowley Historical Society, and Grandview and $100 grants to the Rowley Library and First Congregational Church of Rowley. Ken Jewett made a motion to accept, Barbara Shaw seconded and the Board accepted making these grants again for the 2012 fiscal year.

Ted brought up the Rowley Cemetery headstone restoration project that was recently completed. 28 stones were restored by Mr. Appell in this process. Bunny Mansir thought that there were close to 40 headstones originally identified for restoration. Ted asked her to identify these stones and he would communicate with Mr. Appell about their status.

Elections:
The roster of directors for the year were presented and accepted by the Board. All the officers agreed to stay on for another year in their respective offices except Lee Petry and were accepted by the Board and voted by acclimation. Barbara Shaw made a motion, Linda Remley seconded and the Board Meeting was adjourned at 3:25pm.

I have been trying to find a old friend for almost 40 years !! Ursula was born in German (1946) Married Charles Jewett (New York) in about 1966 in California. She was a nanny and he was a sky marshal. They moved to New Milford, Ct where I met her. She had 3 sons including a set a twin boys. The only other thing I remember is that Charlie's father was a pastor in New York. If you can find anything, I would be so grateful. I know that there is a Ursula Jewett in Wisconsin, but I called her and she is not the Ursula (Ulla) that I knew. Thanks for any help that you might give me. Bev Pickert

L. Fred Jewett – Former Dean of Harvard College

Lester Fred Jewett, aged 75, former dean of Harvard College and a longtime University administrator, died on Sunday, November 27, 2011 in the Life Care center of Leominster. Fred was born April 1, 1936 in Providence, RI, the son of Morris Lester Jewett and Vera Mable (Kress) Jewett. Fred is survived by his sister, Pauline "Skipp" Jewett Hill Shafer of West Lafayette, IN; and by his brother, David Jewett of East Falmouth, MA. He is also survived by many nieces and nephews, including Dave Hill of Lunenburg; and many grandnieces and grandnephews.

Fred began his long association with Harvard as a scholorship student from Taunton, Massachusetts, when he entered the College as a freshman in 1953. He received his A.B. in government magna cum laude in 1957, and, after a year of study in France, returned to Cambridge in 1958 to atten Harvard Business School, from which he received his M.B.A. in 1960. At this time, Jewett also served as one of the original freshman advisers, a role he would continue to play at the College for the next 40 years.

L. Fred Jewett would spend much of his Harvard career helping applicants from many different backgrounds follow him into the Yard, and flourish once they arrived. Much of Jewett's career at Harvard was spent in the Office of Admissions and Financial Aid, which he joined in 1964, where he was director of freshman scholarships (1967-1972). Fred also served as a proctor in the Yard (1958-1977), and then freshman dean (1972-1984). Fred then ascended to the position of Dean of Harvard College (1985-1995). It was in this latter role that Jewett made some of his most lasting contributions to undergraduate life. He oversaw the consolidation of the Harvard and Radcliffe admissions offices, encouraged the admission of minority students, and strengthened the College's commitment to financial aid, to name only a few of his achievements.

When Jewett stepped down as dean of the College, then Harvard president Neil Rudenstine said of him, "He knows what the University is, and what the heart of the College is all about." He is credited for his work in opening up Harvard to women, students of limited means, and a wider geographic range of applicants. His retirement from the office in 1995 did not end his relationship with Harvard, however. He has continued working for the admissions office, sitting in on meetings and fighting, as he always has, "for deserving students who are going to make a difference."

On Commencement afternoon in 2003, the Harvard Aluni Association awarded Jewett the Harvard Medal for extraordinary service to the University. The citation read:

From Byerly Hall to Harvard Yard, from admissions to athletics, from Massachusetts to Maine and back again, you continue to shape the journey of Harvard students from all walks of life as a wise counselor, advisor, and friend.

His definition of excellence spanned the full range of academic disciplines and human talents, including his deep love of music — especially opera — and athletics. According to his niece Megan E. Jewett '86, her uncle's passion for creating a more egalitarian admissions process was sparked by his personal experience coming to Harvard from what she described as "a very, very modest situation."

Harvard President Drew Faust stated that "Fred Jewett was a pillar of the College for more than a generation. He profoundly shaped the undergraduate experience and was dedicated to opening Harvard to the most talented students, regardless of background. I'm deeply saddened by his loss." "Fred's vision and leadership did much to create today's Harvard," said William R. Fitzsimmons, dean of admissions and financial aid to students in Harvard College. "He became a mentor and a lifelong friend to countless undergraduates, enabling them to achieve goals they never dreamed possible. He had a profound effect on my life as well and set a standard for loyalty to Harvard that will never be matched."

Jewett's commitment to diversity continued throughout his tenure as dean of Harvard College (1985-1995), during which he presided over the controversial decision to randomize House assignments. Before 1996, freshmen selected their top three choices for housing, which were then sorted by computer. The result was that students often ended up spending the next three years at Harvard with people of similar backgrounds and perspectives. With randomization, Jewett ensured that undergraduates would be exposed to the diversity he had brought to Harvard at admissions.

"One of Fred's first moves as dean was to say, 'We've worked so hard at admissions to bring in students from every background. It's a shame they don't get more from the diversity,'" said Freshman Dean and former Associate Dean of the College for Housing Thomas A. Dingman '67. "There was a lot of criticism from those who felt we were undermining an important element of the Harvard experience, but after the change, we found that Houses were still able to carry on their traditions — the Lowell House Opera, success in intramural sports, etc. … With a more diverse population, you could still have extraordinary programming."

Friends and colleagues say that they will remember the man known to many as "Mr. Harvard" for his generosity, his decency, and his devotion to the College and its students. Former Harvard President Derek Bok, whose administration (1971-1991) coincided with Jewett's tenure at the Office of Admissions and the Office of the Dean, called him a "remarkably wise counselor."

"Fred Jewett was one in a long line of immensely distinguished deans of admission for Harvard College, and one of the civil servants who do much more than most people realize to make the University function well," said Bok. "He had impressive knowledge of Harvard and how it functions. I relied on his advice in dealing with a whole series of problems that we faced over the 20 years of my administration. We owe him an immense debt for all that he contributed to Harvard."

John P. Reardon, executive director of the Harvard Alumni Association and associate vice president for University relations, said that Jewett was a brilliant man who never forgot his humble beginnings and had a remarkable ability to connect with students.

Harvard College Dean Evelynn M. Hammonds said that she hopes that the occasion of her predecessor's passing will inspire faculty, staff, and students to reflect on a legacy that still shapes the College community today. "Fred Jewett's work made possible not only the diversity of today's student body, but also the diversity of leadership in the College and throughout the University," she said. "As we mourn his loss at the College, we will also remember his remarkable contributions."

A memorial service celebrating the life and service of L. Fred Jewett is tentatively scheduled for the afternoon of April 20 at the Memorial Church in Harvard Yard. All are welcome to attend.

Day Book of Jeremiah Smith Jewett

A journey into the 1850s and the life of Jeremiah Smith Jewett began for Brenda Polidoro when she brought her children to the Laconia Library to take out books. Retired from a career in banking to raise her children, Polidoro and her children were frequent patrons. She read a book recommended by a librarian, "Widow of the South," and was overhead recounting her interest in the story and the period by the director of the city's historical society.

Judy Loto, who then held the job Polidoro has now assumed, asked if she might be interested in volunteering some time to transcribe some of the handwritten words of a "Mr. Jewett" that they had just received in a collection from Mary Orton. Polidoro took it on and word for word got to know the Rev. Jeremiah Smith Jewett. With a quill pen and ink and a beautifully descriptive style, Jewett began writing a daily journal about life in Laconia and Warren from 1822 to 1909. Jewett was from Laconia but commuted by rail to the Warren, home of his wife, Harriet "Hetty" Farnham Jewett.

He was a shopkeeper, postmaster and reverend, and dabbled in medicine and dentistry, participated in autopsies, and at his general store in Warren was the holder of the town teletype when word broke of President Abraham Lincoln's death. "Truly every loyal heart will mourn at this great calamity and probably no man living has so many personal friends as did Abraham Lincoln and no body had more bitter enemies," Jewett wrote, calling the perpetrator "black and wicked."

Jewett went by rail to Massachusetts regularly to buy goods for his store and watched the accused family murderer Lizzie Borden's trial. She was rightfully acquitted, he wrote. He had one son, Martin, who died in the first class at Tilton Seminary at age 19. The couple then adopted a girl from a Franklin orphanage. All are buried in a small Warren cemetery. She said from her reading it appears Jewett regretted not getting a formal education in anything and was a very kindhearted man. Now, Polidoro is the new executive director of the Laconia Historical and Museum Society, and has published Jewett's handwritten words, which she has transcribed exactly as they were written.

Polidoro said she found many coincidences about Jewett and her own life in Laconia, including a visit he made to her house when it was owned by his friend, Harriet Gale. Jewett "gifted" the land for Lakes Region General Hospital by selling it to the Lakes Region Hospital Association and then giving that money back to them to start to construct a hospital. His parents owned a sizable property on Gilford Avenue.

The first of three expected volumes from Jewett's 3,000 pages, published by Xlibris, entitled "Day Book of Jeremiah Smith Jewett" is available online for $23.99 at Amazon.com and others (ISBN 978145687364-6). An opening reception for a display of Jewett's works will be at the library at 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 2, and Polidoro will host a selected reading Monday, Nov. 21, at 7 p.m. Proceeds from the book go to the historic society.
